- Means that biodiversity policies, governance and management do not violate human rights and that those implementing such policies seek ways to support and promote human rights in their design and implementation.
- It is a key issue the recognition of rights over lands, territories and resources in area-based measures in customary sustainable use, in traditional knowledge and in full and effective participation.
- We need to secure the exercise of women and girls rights and their participation in decision making .We need a new target on the issue but also ways to disaggregate data across targets and indicators.
- Exercise the rights of younger and future generations..
- Implementation of the voluntary guidelines for the sustainability of small scale fishers in the context of food security and poverty eradication..
